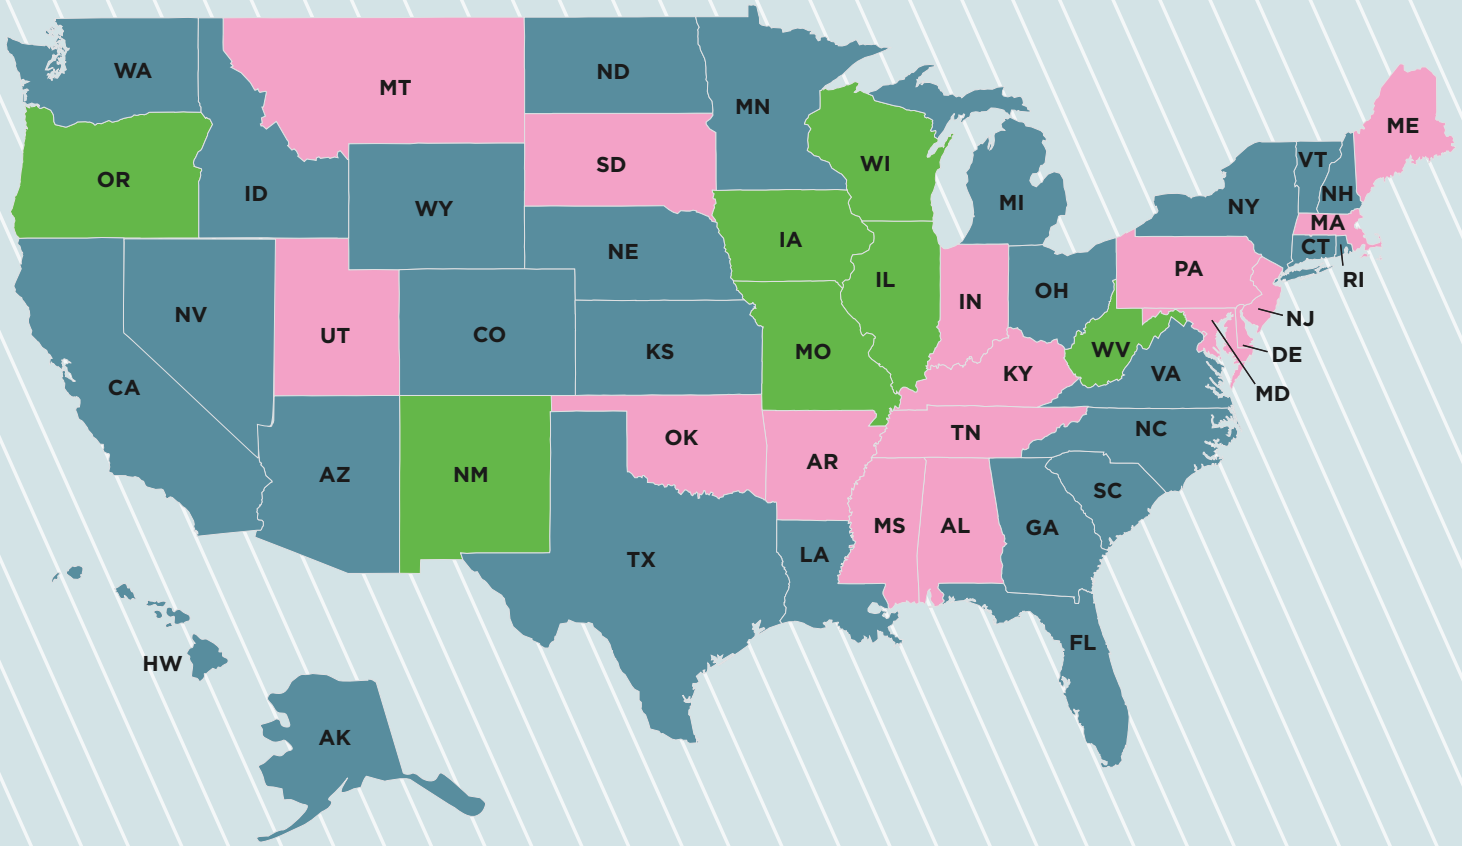
STATE SHIPPING LAWS



RECIPROCAL STATES

Consumers living in reciprocal states can have wine shipped to them from retailers selling out of other reciprocal states. They may also receive shipments from limited states, as long as the limited states in question accept shipments from the consumer's state of residence. Think of it this way: "My store will ship to you, but only if your store will ship to me." Consumers in reciprocal states cannot receive shipments from retailers in prohibited states

LIMITED STATES

Since the repeal of Prohibition, each state government has set up its own laws governing alcohol sales; whether through regulating the legal drinking age, hours of sale, or interstate sales and shipment, laws can and have varied. If you live in a limited state, you can have alcohol shipped to you, but there are restrictions. They vary from state to state but may involve which states may ship to you or how much alcohol can be shipped to you in a calendar year. To learn about state specific restrictions, contact your local government.

PROHIBITED STATES

If you live in one of these states, you're out of luck. Residents in these states are not allowed to receive alcohol shipments. In some cases, it's even a felony.

INFORMATION PROVIDED BY THE WINE INSTITUTE